About the Community Development Block Grants Program

The City of Charlottesville is proud to partner with the U.S. Department of Housing & Urban Development (“HUD”) to deliver the Community Development Block Grants Program (“CDBG”). Through this partnership, HUD provides valuable funding that helps Charlottesville nurture healthy and vibrant communities, with a special emphasis on fostering benefits for low- and moderate-income (“LMI”) residents so that all of our neighbors have the opportunity to thrive.

Through CDBG, the City of Charlottesville partners with an array of local community-benefit organizations to design and implement programs that foster economic opportunities through activities related to economic development, commercial and residential revitalization, and/or job creation.

About the HOME Investment Partnerships Program

The City of Charlottesville is proud to partner with the U.S. Department of Housing & Urban Development (“HUD”) and the Thomas Jefferson Planning District Commission (“TJPDC”) to provide financial and other programmatic supports to a wide array of community-benefit organizations that help nurture healthy and vibrant communities, with a special emphasis on affordable housing activities designed to support high-quality housing and living environments as well as to increase the availability of high-quality homeownership and rental opportunities for income-qualified LMI persons.

The City of Charlottesville works closely with TJPDC and the staff of five neighboring counties (Albemarle, Fluvanna, Greene, Louisa and Nelson) through a regional partnership known as the Thomas Jefferson HOME Consortium. Through HOME, the Consortium members partner with an array of local community-benefit organizations to design and implement programs that provide vital financial and capacity building supports to many local community-benefit organizations so that they can develop and rehabilitate affordable homeownership and rental opportunities to benefit income-qualified city residents.
